Not illustrated. 1886 Excerpt: .(c + g) = 0. (8). What is practically required is to know that the smaller time constant is so large that it may be safely treated as infinite; so it is convenient to have an inferior limit in a simple form. If we write equation (8) in the form $Pf + Q + B, = 0$, then if the roots be real it may be easily shewn that the smaller time constant is greater than B/Q ; if the roots be imaginary the real time constant is $Q/2P$. But it is not likely that much error will arise in practice through neglecting the self-induction in calculating the time constant. For when L is large enough to govern the smaller time constant, the latter approximates to the value $(g + B) L$, where B is a positive constant depending on the resistances. Now the selfinduction of a galvanometer...
