There has never been a crime of any kind about here in the memory of the oldest inhabitant, and I do not believe this is anything but a natural death. People can t live forever, even if they have no disease. Such language would certainly sound very strange, and the crude methods of such an investigation would be very evidently absurd, but not really more so than this assumption of a uniform action of the elements during all past time. Geologists are only coroners at large. On every bed, nay, on every fossil, we must hold a post mortem, and determine, independently of all theories, how these creatures died, and how the bed...
